In April 2020 sculptors & curators Coral Lambert and Cynthia Handel started a survey how the pandemic was affecting studio work and what kind of support artists needed. Sculptors tend to work in collaboration or with a team of others to produce and install work so much of the artists practice had stopped altogether, been on hold or changed drastically. They found that many sculptors turned to drawing. The portfolio represents an international collection of women sculptors from the USA and Europe. All of the women in the portfolio are over 50 years of age and approach sculpture in diverse materials and practices from public and process based art to installation and performance. This Berlin show – designed for the 9th ICCCIA – will be completed by sculptures in cast iron. These will be sold in a silent auction to support a young female sculptor.
